In 2005 Ken Rochioli hung up his hat as owner of the Western Boot Steakhouse. But Healdsburg residents knew he wouldn't leave the food industry completely. Well, he's back, and he's excited to announce that he is opening up his own catering company.

With a style that's all his own, Ken offers a distinctive catering experience with a wine country sensibility.

Using only the highest quality, local ingredients, KR Catering offers not only a great value, but also exceptional service. "With my years of experience, I can deliver that and provide the client with a successful event," Ken says.

Ken started his career as a dishwasher at a five-star restaurant in Idaho at the age of 16. Two years later, he was the Sous Chef and by the time he graduated from high school, he shared the head Chef position.

In 1983, he moved back home to Healdsburg to help his dad, Michael

After 15 years of working 12 to 14 hour days, six days a week at the restaurant, Ken was ready to move on and spend more time with his family. Since then, he has relished the time he has with his sons and the entire family out on the Rochioli ranch.

"Spending time with my family has come to mean everything to me," Ken said. "This new venture will allow me the best of both worlds — enjoy time with the ones I love, and provide clients with beginning-to-end catering services to complement their event."

KR Catering uses fresh, local, high-quality ingredients from top vendors and a well-trained staff to meet the needs of any event including weddings, outdoor BBQ parties, business events, fund-raisers and family gatherings.
